Cora Chan and Fiona de Londras (eds)

China's National Security: Endangering Hong Kong's Rule of Law? (2020; Hart Publishing)

Monday, 28 September 2020

1300-1520 (HK Time); 0600-0820 (UK Time)

This webinar is co-organized by the Centre for Comparative and Public Law at The University of Hong Kong and Birmingham Law School. It will be held via Zoom Meeting. Prior registration is required.

This event marks the publication of Chan and de Londras (eds), China's National Security: Endangering Hong Kong's Rule of Law? and places the book—written in 2019—into the context of events since its publication, including notably the passage of the Hong Kong National Security Law. In this collection, contributing authors explored the potential and limits of Hong Kong's laws, institutions and civil society in maintaining the rule of law in light of China's national security imperatives. The collection was published shortly before the Chinese government introduced the Hong Kong National Security Law. In this event, some of the authors in the collection will reflect on to what extent are the safeguards identified in the book displaced or rendered ineffectual by recent events, and whether China's national security law endangers Hong Kong's rule of law. These author reflections will be preceded by a keynote address from Prof Victor V. Ramraj (University of Victoria).
